

Holly

Holly is a spiky plant with red berries. People often settled arguments under a piece of holly tree. Holly is believed to frighten off evil witches and other evil spirits and other evil things. Holly is believed to protect the house from thunder and lightning. In the west of England it is said that a little bit of holly tree is put at the end of a young girl's bed on Christmas Eve - the holly is supposed to keep away mischievous goblins. In England some farmers place a bit of holly in their beehives for more honey from their bees. Holly is put in people's gardens as well. Holly is placed around houses along with greenery and some of the greenery is painted with gold spray. Holly is a very well known plant at Christmas.
